Bloomberg and Harry Marks, and it was entirely consumed in the examination of witnesses introduced by the plaintiff, Busby having completed his story, and Mr. A. L. Lucas, his confidential clerk and bookkeeper, having been put on, though he will not conclude his testimony until to-day.

on, though he will not conclude his tender mony until to-day.

Mr. Busby was rigidly cross-examined in turn by Messrs. Smith, Meredith and Huaton, after his counsel, Mr. Royall, had finished with his examination in chief, and then Mr. Lucas was put on, and when court took a recess at 6:30 o'clock last night until do 'clock this morning, he was being cross-examined by Mr. Meredith, who is representing Mr. Harry Marks, one of the defendants. While there were some sharp passages between Messrs. Royall and Smith on yesterday, they were not as frequent as on the previous day, and, Judge Ingram had the jury taken out only once for the purpose of hearing argument upon the admission of evidence. The case is being vigorously contested by the Jawyers on both sides, and it looks now as if the second trial will be long drawn out.

When Mr. Lucas resumes his testimony to-day he will bring a number of books and papers asked for by Mr. Meredith and his associates.

Morning Session.

Gourt convened promptly at 10 o'clock, end Mr. Busby resumed his testimony, being further examined by his counsel, Mr. Royall.

He completed his direct testimony within fifteen minutes and was taken in hand and rigidly cross-examined by Mr. Smith, counsel for Mr. Bloomberg.

The memory of the witness did not seem to be very clear ng to the compensation paid Dawson by him for endorsing his paper, and he and Mr. Smith had some rather warm passages at one another. Witness said he had not had any written contract with Dawson, except those already he vidence, and when he had relterated this he was hunded a paper by Mr. Smith, which witness said was in the handwriting of Loudence in the case, but to test the memory of the witness, as it related only to the division of profits arising out of the sale of an invention by the witness, as it related only to the division of profits arising out of the sale of an invention by the witness, and invention by the witness, and invention by the witness, and he had not thought he would meeting this financial affairs prior to June 20, 1903, and up to that the enda not thought he would meeting the sale of an invention witness and minuted to he result of an invention of the sale of an invention by the witness and minuted the would nearly worried regarding his financial affairs prior to June 20, 1903, and up to that the enda not thought he would necessary when the would have to do untat day, white a good deal of cross-firing arose between witness and Mr. Smith over the famous letter of the 17th of June, written in Lucas's hand and signed by the Dawson. Witness said he had never seen or known awilling of the letter units.

Testing Memory.

he often invoked it in proceeding with his cross-examination.

Asked by Mr. Smith as to what extent Dawson was on the paper of witness on June 1, 1903, the latter said about $11,500, and that the notes were in two banks. He said Toler and Sons were also on some of his paper. Witness said he did not owe Dawson anything besides the $11,500 ora the notes on June 1st, but this wits qualified by an admission later on that he probably owed him $2,000 borrowed money, but he was not at all certain about this.

The general letter of June 20th, sent out by Dawson to the creditors of Busly, asking for extension, was produced, and witness declared that he had given Dawson no authority to send out such a letter. Some eighteen replies from Northern creditors to this letter were produced, and witness said they were received while he was away at Otterburn Springs for his health. Mr. Meredith read all the letters to the jury. They were nearly all dated June 22d and suggested many different plans of settlement, most of them offering extension of from thirty to inlety days. Witness again declared that he had no recollection of authorizing Dawson on June 20th to send out any etters, and that he gave him the power of attorney will meredited the while se again declared that while he had given Dawson no power of attorney until Monday, he and Dawson had talked the matter over with reference to his affairs, but they had rever reached any definite conclusion until Monday. Afternoon Session.'

Promptly at 3:30 o'clock the trial was resumed, and Mr. Meredith proceeded to question Mr. Busby, and the witness said Mr. Allen had commenced work for him on April 19, 1903. Marks had come to the store of the witness on July 8th, and they had later gone together to Bloomberg's office to get a copy of the Marks letter. Bloomberg said he did not have a copy of the letter, and witness could not get from him the nature of the communication, Bloomberg saying all that was contained in the letter was for the benefit of the witness.

"It told Bloomberg I wanted to know all about the matter," said the witness the witness.

"I told Bloomberg I wanted to know all about the matter," said the witness, "and that I did not desire to put any blame on Marks unless he deserved it."

Mr. Hunton now took the witness, and he held in his hand a financial statement as to the affairs of the witness, about which the latter was questioned. The statement was as of June 16, 1963, and it showed that Busby owed on that date over $55,900, not including a memorandum at the bottom of $2,000 due Luther Dawson. The memory of the witness was not clear as to fills paper, and he said he could not tell about the amounts without referring to his books. He could not say in answer to a question by Mr. Hunton, how much he owed on September 1, 1963.

Memory Again Tested.

Winess said the first time he knew of Dawson's authority in the conduct of Mr. Busby's affairs was on the morning of 1004. trains.

he knew nothing of it. This is the letter which Mr. Royall said in his opening statement on Monday he would prove and been tampered with at the last trial and the date changed.

Mr. Meredith now took charge of the witness and he questioned him as to whether in June, 1903, he had a Mr. Allen had formerly been in business on his own account, on Main Street.

Wilness admitted that there had been no trouble between himself and Marks up to June 18, 1903, when the latter had written a letter to the creditors of the witness. Lockheim, the Philadelphia merchant, had informed witness of the letter. He had finally gotten a copy of it from Thalheimer, in Baltimore, and Mr. Meredith finally drew from the witness the admission that he had signed an agreement with Thalheimer not to sue Marks, if he should be given a copy of the letter witten by Marks on June 18, 1903. He admitted, too, that he had waited a month for six weeks before going to see, and had come in and proposed that witness of had come in and proposed that witness the safe that he admitted, too, that he had waited a month or six weeks before going to see by Dawson, putting his proposition of reorganization in writing.

Questioned by Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith began his cross-examination of Lucas at 5-16, and he started out where Mr. Royali had left off, with the letter of June 20th. Mr. Royali had attempted to prove by Lucas that the date on the letter was forged in during the former trial. Witness repeated his testimony to Mr. Smith, and the latter reached for the record in the former trial and read the testimony of Lucas on this point. It showed that the date had been discovered on the letter during the examination-inchief of Lucas, and that the date was June 20, 1903. Mr. Smith pressed this joint home, and declared that the contention that the date was forged during the former trial was an absolute falsehood. Mr. Smith and Mr. Royali had some warm words, and the latter declared that his contention was that the date was put in after the paper was brought into court.

Witness was cross-examined by Mr.
Meredith, but in a few moments he was passed on to Mr. Funton, who questioned him briefly. Mr. Hunton asked as to the assets and ligabilities of Busby from time to time, but most of these matters went by with the request that the witness come prepared to answer to-day, which lie said he would do.

At this hour, 6:39 o'clock F. Mt., the court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning, when Mr. Lucas will resume his testimony.
